Hello friends, welcome you to my instructables . In this instructables you will see how to make a simple TV Remote controlled outlet/infrared outlet. so let's begin...if you don't want to read the whole instructables then simply watch the video till end for proper understanding....Things needed for making this -> cd4017 ic.> green led.> 9v battery cap.> 9v battery.> bc558 npn transistor.> bc547 npn transistor.>7805 voltage regulator ic.> 12v relay.> pcb.>100 ohm resistor.>100k resistor.> rainbow cable.>IR Sensor (i used tsop 1838).After getting all these things . let's start making the circuit.....follow the circuit diagram and make the circuit easily..and connect it to 5v supply from the converter and connect input of 7805 to 9v battery....and make it work...if you want to download circuit diagram then download from the below given link - Infrared outlet circuit diagram - Circuit Diagram9v-5v voltage regulator - Circuit DiagramThe working is very simple . when the ir waves from remote falls on sensor.it senses it and provide the 1v output to bc558 base and as a result ,the transistor triggers and provide 5v to clk.which bounced the initial output O0 TO O1 and the outlet goes off because relay is connected to O0.now , again when the ir signal is received the ic again bounces the output to O2 from O1 and O2 is connected to reset .so when the O2 gets on the chip resets back and again output goes to O0 and outlet goes on....and this process continues...if you have any question , then ask in comment box....Thanks for Watching... Realme TV Invite (Image credit: Realme) Realme will unveil its first Smart TV for the Indian market on May 25.The company's first smartwatch will also debut at the same event.Realme TV is expected to have Android TV and include official Netflix support as well.Realme today sent invites to an online launch event on May 25 for its first Smart TV, expected to be called the Realme TV. In addition to the Realme TV, the company is also expected to take the wraps off its first smartwatch at the same event.Source: Realme (Image credit: Source: Realme)The Realme TV is rumored to be offered in two sizes - 43-inch and 55-inch. While the key features of the Realme TV remain a mystery at this point, it is expected to run Android TV or a custom UI that could be based on Android TV. As per a recent leak, the Realme TV might ship with the Netflix app pre-installed and Google Assistant built-in.The Realme Watch will be a fitness-focused smartwatch with a 1.4-inch 320 x 320 LCD display. It will be capable of tracking 15 different exercises and support features such as sedentary reminders and 24-hour heart rate monitoring. It is also tipped to come with IP68 certification for water and dust resistance and a 160mAh battery. On the software side of things, the Realme Watch is said to run on a proprietary OS and not Google's Wear OS.On the same day, Realme will be holding an event in China to unveil a few more new products. As per teasers shared by the company on Weibo, it is likely to introduce a new gaming-focused smartphone with 65W SuperDart charging and 5G support.Best Cheap Android TVs in 2020 Home theatre PCs are a cool way to sneak a PC into the living room. And with the right case, an HTPC can blend right in with the rest of your AV gear. Wireless keyboards and mice make it possible to drive a PC using traditional methods, but once a PC has made a move into your entertainment center, it's handy to be able to drive it using the same tool you use for the rest of your gear: a universal remote. Many PC motherboards have pinouts for an IR transceiver, but few if any cases have a front panel IR accommodation, and IRda was never really intended for use as a remote IR receiver. A Canadian outfit called Homeelectronics has a $20 answer to this problem called the Ira, an IR receiver on a four-foot cable that connects via a standard nine-pin serial port and allows you to drive your PC with just about any IR remote you wish (and so much for legacy serial port removal). We took Ira for a spin, and while we liked what we found, getting your remote to work with it requires a fair amount of hand tuning. A number of apps can make the programming process pretty painless, and if you're willing to put in the time, you can use any of your living room remotes to make your PC do your bidding.Before we get any further, you may be wondering, "Why not just get an ATI Remote Wonder or a remote/IR receiver package like StreamZap?" While both of these options will accomplish the same thing as Ira, the ATI Remote Wonder uses RF signaling, so it can't drive any other AV components. In the case of the StreamZap, you get an integrated hardware/software package, but it's yet another remote to add to the pile of remotes already littering your entertainment center, and it can't drive anything other than your PC. With Ira and your existing remotes, you can add a PC to the components you drive with your existing remote hardware, and it's cheaper than either of those other two options. Microsoft is constantly testing new features for Xbox through its Insider Program, and the company has just added new HDMI-CEC features that make it so you can control your Xbox Series S|X consoles with a TV remote. RELATED: Get the Latest Xbox Features Before Everyone Else with the Insider Program With the update, you can navigate around your Xbox console's dashboard and control streaming apps like Netflix, Hulu, and Twitch without needing to power on your Xbox controller. Instead, you can just use your TV's remote, assuming your TV supports HDMI-CEC technology. Going the other way, you can also have your TV automatically switch to your Xbox's input by pressing the Xbox button on your controller. It's a small thing that makes hopping into a game a quicker process since you won't need to flip through inputs every time you turn on your Xbox. You'll need to be a member of the Alpha or Alpha Skip-Ahead Insider branches on your Xbox if you want to take advantage of this feature right now. To enable it, you'll have to head to the HDMI-CEC settings part of your Xbox and enable the new features. While Microsoft is testing these features with Insiders, we'd expect to see these additional HDMI-CEC controls come to all Series S|X consoles at some point in the next few months, but we'll have to wait and see.
